AIxCrypto Co-CEO Jerry Wang Shares Weekly Investor Update: Agent Ecosystem Application Progress and Infrastructure Development

March 9, 2026

LOS ANGELES, CA (March 9, 2026) /PRNewswire/ — AIxCrypto Inc. (NASDAQ: AIXC) ("AIxC" or the "Company"), a technology company focused on infrastructure for the emerging Embodied AI (EAI) ecosystem, today shared a weekly business update from Co-CEO Jerry Wang highlighting continued progress across core Agent ecosystem applications, including REE platform development, Agentir advancement, developer-facing architecture, and early device connectivity infrastructure.

Advancing Core Agent Ecosystem Applications

This week, AIxC continued to advance application-layer development across the EAI × Agent ecosystem, with priority placed on accelerating delivery of live product workflows. Core modules of the REE platform — including Agent registration, task discovery, and automated settlement of ecosystem-based tasks — have continued to iterate and have now entered internal testing. These modules are intended to support more structured coordination across users, agents, and future connected devices, while providing an early operational framework for participation, execution, and settlement across the ecosystem.

AIxC also continued to make progress in its support for the AIxC ecosystem andAgentir, an AI Agent arena designed to support rules-based interaction, performance evaluation, and iterative optimization. The project is expected to be launched by the Foundation in the near term. The Company believes that supporting products such as REE and Agentir can help move ecosystem development from concept validation toward live interaction, product engagement, and more practical testing of Agent capabilities.

Building the Developer and Device Connectivity Layer

In parallel, AIxC has continued work on the broader infrastructure needed to support ecosystem expansion. Architecture design for the Agent Store is underway, with the aim of building a publishing and distribution platform through which authorized ecosystem participants may create, package, and deploy Agent capability modules more efficiently. The Company believes this type of modular framework may help lower development barriers, improve composability, and support broader developer participation over time.

AIxC has also completed preliminary design work on middleware intended to connect EAI devices to the Agent network, laying early technical groundwork for onboarding future partners. Together, these efforts reflect the Company's current focus on supporting ecosystem growth through live products, developer enablement, and the technical foundations required to connect real-world devices to Agent-based workflows.
